SILVER LINING

A FAMILY GATHERING,
AND THE REVIVAL OF AN HEIRLOOM.

Thanksgiving tables often tend toward the rustic and the robust, worthy celebrations of the bounties of the fall harvest. But when an occasion calls for the family china—updated here with malachite-printed plates, eggplant-hued champagne coupes, and artfully mismatched flatware—we're in favor of swapping out a reclining horn of plenty for an elegant—and upright—row of epergnés. The sterling silver antique pieces consist of lacy, ornate baskets hung gingerly from a central vessel. They're lovely when filled with fresh fruit (figs, grapes, oranges with their leaves) but also when stuffed with flowers and vines. And though they look terribly formal, epergnés encourage a casual gesture from guests—to share what is plentiful and all that is sweet. ◀
